

Background paper of children's personal information protection in cyberspace

In recent years, children's personal information disclosure incidents of large multinational internet companies have caused continuous concern in the international community. Issues such as illegal collection of children's personal information, data disclosure or abuse have infringed on the legitimate rights and interests of children and their families. Therefore, there is an increasing interest to enhance children's personal information protection regulations around the world in order to build a healthier and constructive relationship between children and Internet companies, and provide meaningful remedy for children whose rights have been violated. Sharing the successful experiences and practices among stakeholders in children's personal information protection will help us to build consensus and promote international cooperation.
